

Delusional disorders are a form of psychosis, in which the person has paranoid delusions. These are usually long lasting and don't have an obvious physical cause, such as a head injury. In older people, they may be accompanied by auditory hallucinations (noises, sounds, other people talking and so on, which don't exist).

Delusions are beliefs that are not backed up by reality. Even though there may be evidence to the contrary and no one else believes them to be true, the person will still believe them. They tend to be beliefs of a suspicious nature, where the person believes something is not right with them, or the world in general. This can cause serious problems for them. Delusional (paranoid) disorders are uncommon and affect around 1 in 3333 people.
