

Many of us wear a number of different hats – we are partner (husband/wife), daughter, son, mother, father, uncle, aunty, sister, brother, friend, colleague etc. We are also members of a number of different groups – work, sports team, local community group, political group, fire and rescue volunteer, advisory committee, advocacy panel etc.

Develop your understanding of the role communication plays in creating, maintaining or destroying relationships, and your ability to assist others to improve their relationships communications.

This course is useful both for those who work in counselling, to people who manage relationships in a work place (eg. supervisors of work teams), or individuals who simply seek to better understand the dynamics of relationships between people in every day life.
